Murray Lindo

Head, Wellington College Community

Head of the Wellington College Foundation

Murray started his career in banking, then retrained to become a teacher (teaching history, geography, drama and coaching sport). Murray then spent the next 20 years working in the not-for-profit sector and has held senior roles at some of the largest charities in the UK, including Macmillan Cancer Support, Samaritans, and Breast Cancer Care. He is also an experienced consultant having worked with a large number of charities, NGOs, and social enterprises on branding, communications, fundraising, organisational development, team building, and coaching, and is also a qualified business psychologist and trained actor.

After five years as Director of the Tonbridge Foundation, Murray has now been Head of the Wellington Community at Wellington College for the last five years. Along with raising funds for their bursary and capital building programme, Murray and his team run the global social and professional Wellington Connect network for parents (past and present) and OWs as well as providing career advice and support for current students.
