Sophie started her career in advertising and marketing with Ogilvy and Mather. After living and working in Asia for 15 years, she returned to her hometown and joined the Development Department at The King's School Worcester where she oversaw two major Capital Campaigns and established a bursary programme.

She has now worked in educational fundraising for over 15 years with experience at a Co-education former boarding school, a boys' prep school and is currently at South Hampstead High school - an all-girls day school in London. Since joining South Hampstead, she has established a full development function and under the overarching Towards 150 Strategic plan, has successfully completed a major capital campaign and project, launched the Opening Doors Bursary Campaign and enabled a step change in bursary provision at the school.
