

Mr Nick Hewlett – Head

After a brief spell in the City, working at Tullett and Tokyo, Nick went to King's College London to study Geography, where he obtained First Class honours in 2002.

After contemplating a career as a professional singer, Nick decided to complete a PGCE at the Institute of Education, leading him to take his first teaching job at Dulwich College, in 2003. After three years, Nick was made Head of Geography at Magdalen College School, Oxford where, over the next five years, he was given additional responsibilities as a Housemaster, Contingent Commander of the CCF and Director of the annual Arts Festival. In 2011, Nick was employed as part of a team that helped to lead a flagship school on the island of Jeju, South Korea, under the banner of North London Collegiate School. The school quickly became a beacon of excellence in Asia, and after just three years obtained amongst the best IB results of any school in the world.

Returning to his roots, Nick joined St Dunstan's as Head in 2014, and has taken the school on a significant journey of renewal and improvement, recently being awarded Independent School of the Year at the TES awards. Nick is a huge believer in a broad renaissance education, driven by values and character and the championing of individuality. Nick lives with his partner, Alberic, in Croydon and their one-year old daughter, Cecilia.
